- 1) What challenges can an adult learner face?
  - 2) When does a child make the first big step?
  - 3) What is the role of lifetime education?
  - 4) What are modern educational tendencies?
  - 5) Why is it so hard to get the highest level of education?
  - 6) When does early education normally begin?
  - 7) When is it important to make the right decisions?
- A Education is a process which can occupy us for most of our lives. It teaches us what we need to know, and prepares us for a life beyond the classroom. It continues as we get older after we leave the classroom, and it never really stops. We learn not only facts and information, but also the necessary skills to become a useful member of society.
- B Children usually begin their education with ‘pre-school’ classes at the age of 3 or 4. This might seem too young for some children to be away from their parents, but separation has to happen at some point. School is the main environment where a child must learn to act as an individual, and the break has to be made sooner or later.
- C Junior school is where a child encounters formal education for the first time, and the teacher will actually teach rather than control the kids’ playing. This first major change in the nature of education is the basis of learning to gain knowledge – learning how to learn – as the child realises school is about much more than simply fun and games.
- D High school, for teenagers, is where it gets serious. So many changes, so many important things to take into account – exams, friends, appearance – so many choices! What’s worse, failure can have extremely serious effects on a student’s future. Students who don’t get down to some serious study and pass their exams will probably not like the consequences.
- E At university, things change again. A student often leaves home for the first time to go to university, and suddenly, there are problems – like cooking your own food – that have to be solved. The student is on their own, and has to deal with it. They have earned their freedom, but now they have to live up to the challenge.
- F Even if someone feels they didn’t achieve all they could have done in their school life, we must remember that age is no barrier to learning. Many people nowadays return to education in their later years to complete their studies, or gain further professional qualifications, or merely to learn something new. Mature students bring something new to the classroom, as well as their ‘wise old heads’.
